We don't sell many games here at Indie Game Reviews, but this one is a must. It's called "The Getaway". You play as a bank robber stealing money from different local banks. Your mission is to steal as much money as you can and make it back to the getaway car, which is directly on your right hand. There are many challenges that you need to take care of. Some of them are obvious like checkpoints, police and security guards. Others like a certain number of money to win in the bank. If you fail to reach the car you lost the money and it's all over, you fail to complete your mission. The controls are simple and effective. Left click to shoot, right click to throw grenades and hold down a button to get a power up. There are a lot of power ups, so use them wisely. You are also able to jump over high walls, by pressing the button a few times, before pressing jump. The jumping can be very useful at some points, but be careful, as you can get a hard hit if you jump and miss. Don't get me wrong, this game is not for everyone. It is a very challenging game, with a lot of things to deal with. If you are not into that kind of game, this may not be the one for you. Still, if you can take on challenges like these, and are into action games, then this game is definitely one you need to download. I guarantee you'll have a good time playing it. This game is definitely worth the download, even if you don't get to the end, it will certainly provide you with a good time. Give "The Getaway" a try. You'll like it. When I'm done playing a game I often save it to my computer so I can keep playing it later. If I save the game, the next time I start the game I'll need to go through the same stage that I did when

The drug release behavior of water-insoluble drug, flurbiprofen was assessed by using oil-based sustained-release micro-capsule formulations containing ethyl cellulose as a matrix and Aerosil, oil-water-soluble surfactant. Three types of micro-capsule formulations containing different levels of Aerosil (0.5%, 1.0%, 1.5%) were prepared by using micro-fluidized bead milling method. Micro-capsules containing Aerosil and drug showed a higher release of flurbiprofen than that of micro-capsules containing Aerosil only. Moreover, the release profiles of micro-capsule formulations were dependent on the Aerosil content. In in vivo studies, a nasal spray was prepared containing micro-capsules containing flurbiprofen and Aerosil (1.5%) and applied to rats. Flurbiprofen concentrations were measured in the plasma and nasal cavity by using HPLC. Pharmacokinetic parameters such as C(max), t(1/2) and AUC(0-t) were also determined. A greater amount of flurbiprofen was retained in the nasal cavity than in the plasma, and drug release from the micro-capsules seemed to be sustained over a prolonged period. Based on these results, the micro-capsule containing 1.5%
