User reviews Michael said: I have been using the Portrailed Firefox for years now, and the Private Browsing by PortableApps.com is a great upgrade to the original. It works the same but has some cool additions like the adblock and the flashblock and still has the same multi-browser support as the original. I recommend it as it really does work well. KeyMacro is a keyboard macro recorder that automatically saves information about your text. In a few seconds you will be able to trigger a text string through macros recorded with the tool. You can specify the text string and the action that will be performed after triggering the macro. Text editing operations that are available in the tool include cutting text, changing characters and words, copying text from any location, or creating a new file. Other features of the tool include creating a new file, opening a selected file, creating a new bookmark and copying a file with a specified extension. You can also select any area of the displayed text, specify the replacement, and instantly trigger the macro. To start recording the text, you need to click the Start Recording button, and to stop it, you need to click the Stop Recording button. KeyMacro works in all applications that support keyboard shortcuts, which include Microsoft Windows, Mozilla Firefox, and Opera. KeyMacro is freeware, however the developer offers a demonstration version of the software as an alternative. CRP-S100A7A expression in the context of a genetic polymorphism in the S100A7A gene is associated with susceptibility to non-small cell lung cancer. S100A7A is a  $\text{Ca}^{2+}$ -binding protein of the S100 family. The heterodimeric complex S100A7A/S100A8 participates in the inflammatory response. The role of S100A7A in the development of non-small cell lung cancer (NSCLC) is unknown. We genotyped the S100A7A gene (rs4259048) in 592 patients with NSCLC and 631 healthy controls from the general population. Serum concentrations of C-reactive protein (CRP) and S100A7A were determined by enzyme-linked immunosorbent assay. CRP was significantly increased in patients with adenocarcinoma compared with those with squamous cell carcinoma and those with small cell lung cancer ( $P < 0.001$ ) and in current smokers compared with those who had never smoked ( $P < 0.001$ ). The polymorphism rs4259048 was significantly associated with the risk of developing adenocarcinoma (OR = 1.39, 95% CI = 1.10-1.77,  $P = 0.006$ ) and patients with squamous cell carcinoma were not at increased risk of developing the disease (OR = 1.17, 95% CI = 0.81-1.69,  $P = 0.41$ ). Serum S100A7A concentrations were increased in patients with NSCLC and were associated with the risk of developing squamous cell carcinoma (OR = 1.51, 95% CI = 1.09-2.11,  $P = 0.02$ ). Among patients with NSCLC, S100A7A was associated with the development of adenocarcin
