NUGT - Government of India Telugu Writing System - Wikipedia As one of the oldest languages in India, Telugu has been influenced by other languages from the time of its earliest development. The Indian oral tradition and the cultures and commerce with the Chola, Chalukya, Kakatiya and Vijayanagar Empires have been a major influences. The first reference to Telugu occurs in the Indian epics, the Ramayana and the Mahabharata, the first to describe the language as a distinct one rather than as one of the Dravidian languages. Another first in the history of Indian languages was in the examination paper for the Mysore Government Engineering Service Examinations conducted in 1930. In this paper it was described as a Dravidian language. It was noticed by the officers of the Mysore Administrative Service that the language used in this paper was neither Sanskrit, nor Tamil, nor Kannada nor Malayalam. Further examination and the interview of the candidate revealed that the language used in the paper was Telugu, the language taught in the first years of the Telugu University established by the Andhra State. In 1920 an Andhra University was established in Kakinada under the Vice-Chancellor of the University. It was in this university, in, that the Telugu language was first given the status of an official language in Mysore, but without indicating the Dravidian element. Now Telugu is an official language in many states of India. The language was made an official language in the Andhra State, which began functioning from, and then in the Mysore State from by. In the case of the Andhra State, Telugu was declared as a separate official language in the official gazette of the state in, and then in the Mysore Gazette in In the case of the Mysore State, the language was first made an official language in in by making it the sole language of instruction for all schools in the state. From June to August, Telugu was declared the third official language of the state, and no objections were raised by any of the dravidian community. Telugu was used as an official language as well in the East Province and in the Hyderabad Province during the time of the Nizam. The Madras State Council Act gave official status to the Tamil language and Tamil was given official status in the whole of 79a2804d6b
